Annual Meeting with PhD Committee

Once a student has passed their oral examination and begins to concentrate on thesis research, they should meet with their thesis committee at least once each year. This committee is made up of the people who served on the student's oral exam committee, and will generally continue to be active until the student defends the thesis. Accordingly, the committee should contain at least one experimentalist and one theorist, and at least one member whose research specialty is different from the student's field of research. Scheduling of the annual meetings of the thesis committee is the responsibility of the student.
