Elizabeth Osborne is Associate Professor in the World Languages Department at Worcester State University. Her research focuses on post-dictatorial memory in the Southern Cone. She has published articles on memory in Chilean literature and documentary film. Her second area of research examines the representation of domestic work in Latin American film, for which she co-edited the volume Domestic Labor in Twenty-First Century Latin American Cinema and has published an article in the Journal Comparative Cinema. She is currently working on an article that will serve as corollary to this work for teaching the topic of domestic labor in Latin American film.
